L-GLUTAMINE

L - glutamine is an amino acid indispensable to proteic synthesis, particularly as regards the immune system and the digestive system. It acts in defence of the organism. It prevents cellular destruction, facilitating for example the healing of ulcers.

The role of glutamine does not stop there: its stocks are built up in the muscles, it also stimulates the synthesis of glycogen, which facilitates recovery after effort and prevents the appearance of muscular cramps.

MONOHYDRATE CREATINE

Creatine is an amino acid produced naturally by the human body. However, the body only produces half the creatine it needs, and that's where a creatine supplement comes in.

Mainly used by athletes, creatine improves endurance and performance, especially in sports with short bursts of high intensity exercise.

Creatine aids the accumulation of ATP (adenosine triphosphate, a cellular energy source) in muscle tissue, helping to supply the right amount of energy during exercise. It also promotes muscle recovery.
